‘Yes, I can see it now,’ said Suma. ‘When that really deadly enemy comes along, we can defeat them by feeding them pizza.’

‘Might work,’ said Finn. ‘The pizzas are terrible. No one would want to take over the galaxy if the food’s that bad.’

The Starchasers were on a planet called Wisdom, which was not a good place for Finn to be. Wisdom was gadget central. Right across the galaxy, ‘Made on Wisdom’ was the designer label to have for anything that bleeped, or sang you to sleep, or created amazing worlds inside your head. The trouble was, a group of crooks somewhere in the galaxy were sticking ‘Made on Wisdom’ labels on their own gadgets and selling them cheaply, which was bad news for Wisdom.

The Starchasers had set up a meeting with Chief Gripper, who ran the police force on Wisdom.

‘The problem is, I can’t do anything about it because it’s happening on another planet. The Galaxy Police keep telling me they’re too busy solving serious crime. They just don’t realise how serious this is for us!’

‘Hmm, that’s the problem with the Galcops,’ said Misha. ‘Too many planets out there, too many places to hide. So, these guys are selling poor quality stuff and putting ‘Made on Wisdom’ labels on it.’

‘No. It’s much, much worse than that. They are making stuff that’s better than we can make and putting ‘Made on Wisdom’ on it.’
