When Daniel's parents go to Scotland instead of celebrating his tenth birthday, he's not impressed. What's more, they've left his dippy Aunt Tink in charge, AND given him a plant as his present ... (which is NOT the pet he begged for!)

So can you really blame him for wishing he had a guinea pig instead of his stupid show-off brother? Or for the fact that his wish actually came true?

But with nutty bullies, crazy chefs and mad scientists about, the race is on for Daniel to somehow undo the magic and restore his brother to human form before his parents find out.
