Meet the Sisters ...

Siti and her friends are really close. So close she calls them her Sisters. They've been mates for ever, and most of the time they are closer than her real family.

Siti is the leader – the one who always knows what to do – but Kelly, Lu, Donna and Rachel have their own lives to lead as well.

Still, there's no one you can talk to, no one you can rely on, like your best mates. Right?

A great idea

“What about a sponsored silence?”
suggested Rachel.

“No – loads of people will suggest that.
We want something really different.”

“How about a sponsored silence for teachers? That would be different!”

Siti made a rude noise.

“A dress down day?”

“Too childish!” Siti was getting cross with herself. She needed a really good idea.

It was activities week at school so, for once, the Sisters were split up. The Sisters were Siti’s friends. They had been mates since they were really small and did everything together.

Rachel and Siti had decided to do work in the community.

There were lots of things planned for the week, like visiting the hospital, spending an afternoon with some senior citizens showing them how to surf the net, and working at a playgroup for disabled children.

The group had been asked to come up with some fundraising ideas. Whoever came up with the best idea could give all the money they raised to the charity of their choice.

“I know – we could run a crèche in the shopping centre,” said Siti. “I bet loads of the parents would pay to get us to look after their little ones.”

They were really pleased when Miss Drake chose their idea.

“It might take a bit of setting up,” she said. “But I’m sure I can do it.”
